

Speaker Bio:

Dr. Ming F. Taylor is an Assistant Professor of Accounting at the Martin Tuchman School of Management, NJIT. She holds a Ph.D. in Management with concentration in Accounting from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, an M.A. in Mathematics and Statistics from Johns Hopkins University and a B.S. in Finance from Tsinghua University. Her primary research area is in financial accounting, behavioral studies, and corporate finance. Her current research explores the role of human behavior, social networks, politics and culture in accounting and finance, and covers topics such as earning quality, financial reporting, fraud and regulation, tax avoidance, corporate innovation, and corporate governance. Her work has been presented at American Accounting Association, Financial Management Association, NJIT Faculty Research Showcase, and seminars at various universities.