NJIT HUB Challenges Students to a Competition

As a society, higher education community or as a neighborhood, public gathering and face-to-face interaction is essential to our daily lives, our health, well-being, planning and organizing.

The NJIT Hub for Creative Placemaking recently hosted a competition for our students. We targeted this competition toward considering how college students (and others) can carry

NJIT offers new creative placemaking undergraduate course

Adding to the broad training programs developed through the NJIT Hub for Creative Placemaking, we are excited to share information regarding creation of a new undergraduate course. "Creativity, Technology and the City" will be offered in the Spring, 2021 schedule of courses through NJIT's Science, Technology and Society program. This course is among the first in the nation to begin to educate and prepare undergraduate...

The Hub Resources

At the NJIT Hub, we are looking into the future that exists for our municipalities beyond the current all-encompassing survival efforts. In what ways can we assist our NJ communities for planning, mitigation, preparedness, analysis, and training?

The current crisis affords us the opportunity to look forward into a new way of thinking and planning for our communities. At the Hub, we design workshops and bootcamps for your municipal decision-makers, community-leaders, specific community groups, or cross-sectoral constituents. Infusing arts and culture into developing solutions is a new way of addressing issues.

Creative Placemaking in Practice

With each newsletter, we will share information and opportunities about creative placemaking from around NJ and beyond.

Spring markets may be canceled, but supporting local makers isn't! Makerhoods Market is an online pop-up featuring Newark-based and New Jerseyan makers. Now, more than ever, it's important to shop local and stand with our small businesses to help weather this
